

Press release
Paris - June, 19th, 2017

SKEMA Business School's master in finance rises to sixth worldwide in Financial Times ranking

The Financial Times has just published its international ranking of pre-experience finance programmes.

SKEMA's MSc in Financial Markets & Investments has been in the newspaper's top 10 since the launch of the ranking in 2011. In the 2017 edition, SKEMA's programme has risen to sixth worldwide among the selected international universities.

As always, our finance programme is recognised for its international exposure: the programme allows students impressive international mobility (international course experience rank: third worldwide) and great international careers (international mobility rank: fifth worldwide). Above all, SKEMA is particularly proud to be ranked at first place on the career progression criterion over three years (career progress rank).

"This sixth place rank acknowledges the outstanding professional success of our graduates and the strong involvement of our academic team. We wish to share this success with them. Our graduates perform exceptionally well in their careers throughout the world only three years after graduation. It is also a tremendous recognition of SKEMA's excellence in finance that we continue to strengthen with the recruitment of international experts (such as Professor Florencio Lopez de Silanes) or the development of research in fintech and ETF (exchange traded funds)" said Alice Guilhon, CEO and dean of SKEMA Business School.

About SKEMA Business School: with more than 7,500 students and 37,000 alumni, SKEMA Business School is a global school with research, programmes and a multi-localisation structure that allow talents to be efficiently trained for the 21st century. The school is present worldwide in China (Suzhou), in the US (Raleigh), in Brasil (Belo Horizonte) and in France (Paris La Défense, Lille and Sophia Antipolis). Accredited by EFMD (Equis), AACSB and AMBA, SKEMA has the triple crown.