SKEMA Business School makes a notable entry into the 2025 Financial Times Executive MBA ranking.

Placing 13th globally for its Global Executive MBA, SKEMA now stands alongside prestigious institutions such as Yale, Wharton, and the London Business School.

Nationally, the programme ranks third among French business schools, just behind ESCP Business School and Insead.

This achievement is based on several key factors. The programme stands out for the excellence of its faculty, the quality of its research, and its strong international diversity, with 85% of its students coming from outside France. Additionally, SKEMA's graduates reported a high overall satisfaction score of 9.50, three years after completing the programme.

Furthermore, SKEMA's educational strategy, which focuses on training leaders who are mindful of societal and environmental challenges, has been recognised, placing the programme 8th globally for the teaching of these crucial topics.

"The SKEMA Global EMBA is not just a series of courses; it is a unique and transformative journey that equips participants to handle the complexities of our world and its organisations. The programme gives participants the chance to become enlightened leaders. It reflects contemporary business and societal challenges and addresses the participants' questions about how to balance personal aspirations with a meaningful and impactful professional future. The Financial Times ranking acknowledges the pioneering role this programme plays in preparing decision-makers for a world in transition," stated Fabien Seraidarian, Director of the Global Executive MBA at SKEMA.

The SKEMA Global Executive MBA offers the opportunity to study in a truly global environment across multiple continents where the school has campuses: Belo Horizonte (Brazil), Paris, Raleigh (United States), and Suzhou (China).
